

My path has been unconventional, deeply rewarding, and increased my trust in Jesus Christ. I completed an Executive Master of Public Administration at the Marriott School after raising four children and am currently working toward a doctorate in Educational Inquiry, Measurement, and Evaluation with an urgency I can only attribute to divine guidance.

My awareness of human suffering began as a missionary to the K'ekchi in Guatemala, and the EMPA and EIME programs have helped me gain the knowledge and skills that will drive meaningful change for communities like theirs.

Today, I lead consulting teams and work as a consultant to measure, evaluate, and analyze programs and interventions, then use that data to co-create actionable, sustainable strategies that maximize impact. This collaborative approach spans local communities, national efforts, and global initiatives.

Beyond consulting, I serve as a researcher, educator, and volunteer. I raise awareness, share knowledge, and inspire action that addresses pressing social issues. I will return to Mozambique in November with others from the McKay School to help village leaders strengthen agricultural programs and train others. I hope to co-create outcomes that will help communities struggling to secure two daily meals move closer to flourishing.
